Extracts.

Angora Horrida.
The Angora Horrida has lately assumed symptoms of unusual activity, at a time when, if we may be permitted to say so, its display, however beautiful, are calculated to produce an inveterate effect on the nerves. Perhaps if it were frequently inclined to its present we should be less inclined to look at it with an eye of suspicion as a harbinger of evil, but although of late years it has been more common in the European region of the northern zone than in former periods, its visits are as a rule few and far between. In a paper by Dr. Martin, entitled "Traité Pathologique et Historique de l'Angora Horrida," published in 1754, is given a record of all the observations of Angora Horrida from the south coast down to that date, as far as they appear upon the page of history. The gross number of distinct phenomena, enumerated by Dr. Martin amounts to 1,200, distributed as follows:—From A.D. 383 to A.D. 1351, 20 were observed; 1351 to 1500, 34; 1500 to 1550, 30; 1550 to 1600, 34; 1600 to 1650, 34; 1650 to 1700, 34; 1700 to 1750, 34; 1750 to 1800, 34; 1800 to 1850, 34; 1850 to 1900, 34; 1900 to 1950, 34; 1950 to 2000, 34.
